Teacher Instructions:

- 1.) This activity is fairly straightforward -- two options exist to best fit your needs. The first option is included this PDF and is more geared toward independent student work. The second option is a stations approach and is located in the other PDF in the folder.
- 2.) In this version, page 7 of the PDF is designed as a "final destination" for each source. After evaluating each document, students should return here to provide a 1-2 sentence summary that answers the overarching question.
- 3.) You can make this as one packet for the kids, or as I like to do, place document zones around the room where they complete certain pages at different locations. This simple movement gets kids up, active, and does help facilitate their learning. If you decide to do this way, I would recommend looking at the stations approach in the other PDF.
- 4.) There are color and black/white versions in this PDF only because I know some teachers like the color aspect, while others who want to make copies for each kid will likely prefer the b/w version.
- 5.) Use the included culminating writing assignment and political cartoon project to best fit your needs!

Enjoy!

"First of all, there's strong evidence of a steady decline in population across the entire Empire from the second century CE on. For example, peaking at around a million or so in the Classical Age, the population of the city of Rome gradually dropped over the course of the next few centuries, reaching a low point of a mere six thousand by the 500's. The reasons for this drastic if incremental reduction in human resources are not clear, though many Romans' luxurious lifestyle and their concomitant disinterest in producing and raising children must have played some part. So did plagues, no doubt, as well as constant warfare on the frontiers..."

Examine this chart closely. What is happening among the Roman Emperors that may have led to Rome's decline?

In 193, Septimius Severus defeated his rivals in a civil war to claim the imperial throne and found a dynasty. His line devalued the currency in order to enlarge the army and double the legionnaires pay...Within a century, the Roman coin was completely worthless. By the late third century, the Roman economy was based on barter.

Doc: 4

The Severan Dynasty ruled until 235. Alexander Severus' death triggered a succession struggle which lasted fifty years. Competing generals, politicians, and barbarian kings all vied to rule the empire. As the power struggle continued, the border collapsed allowing barbarians into Roman territory without governmental approval. The civil wars, raids, and accompanying social unrest destroyed trade. Merchants lost safe routes to the east. Transporting goods to market became hazardous. Rather than risk travel, large landowners grew self sufficient. They produced their own goods rather than trade or purchase them.

As trade collapsed, the various governments that attempted to rule...after the crisis created more taxes more funds for the military. However, people could not afford to pay them. As a result, the government eventually confiscated crops from the people...eventually, the poor paid the taxes for the rich.

What economic issues are identified as causes for decline? _____

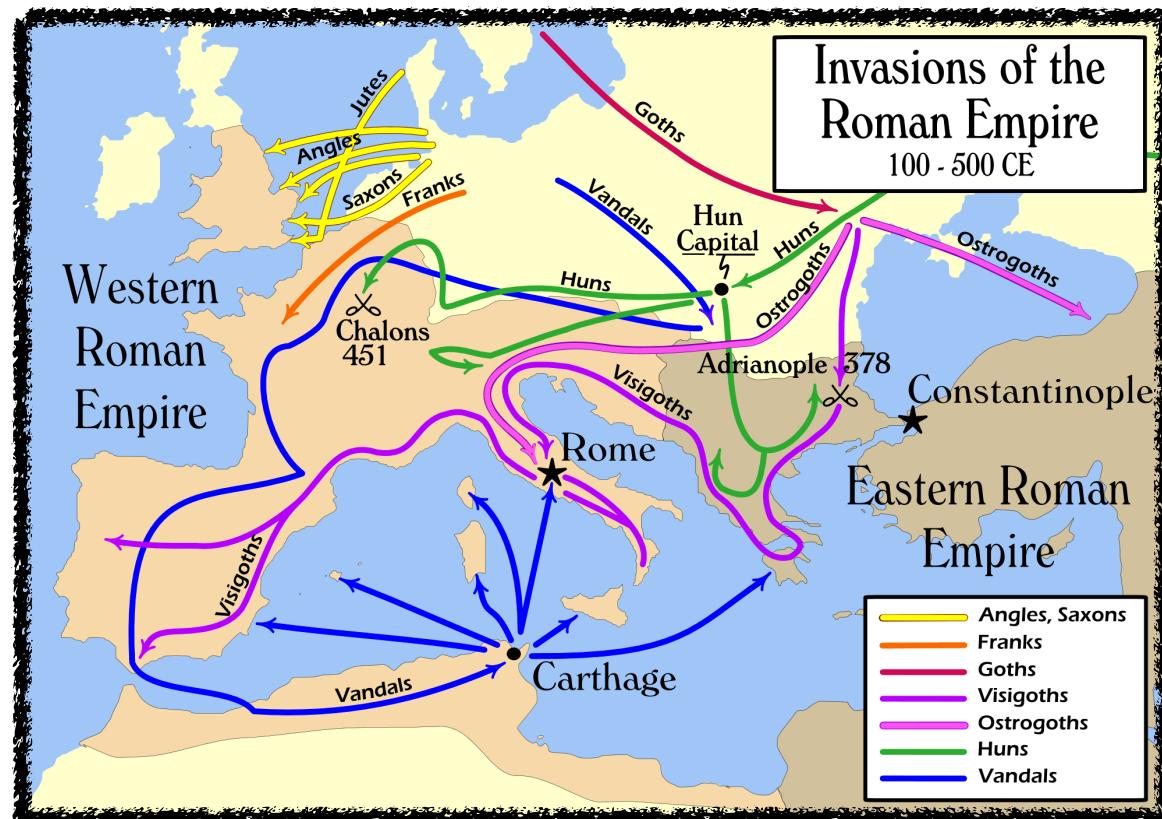

Doc: 5

Rome became reliant on hired, foreign soldiers to bolster their military, especially Germanics. Therefore, much of the military was not loyal to Rome, often switching sides in battle. Mercenaries were more loyal to their commander than the government, leading to several civil wars & military coups which ripened Rome for collapse. At the same time, Rome's eastern and northern borders grew so large they became unable to maintain. As the Germanics became more numerous, it was not feasible to maintain large enough legions to prevent infiltration.

According to the map above, what caused the Roman Empire to fall? _____

Why might this sort of attack be more difficult than if there were just one enemy? _____

Doc: 7

"The decline of Rome dovetailed with the spread of Christianity, and some have argued that the rise of a new faith helped contribute to the empire's fall. The Edict of Milan legalized Christianity in 313, and it later became the state religion in 380. These decrees ended centuries of persecution, but they may have also eroded the traditional Roman values system. Christianity displaced the polytheistic Roman religion, which viewed the emperor as having a divine status, and also shifted focus away from the glory of the state and onto a sole deity. Meanwhile, popes and other church leaders took an increased role in political affairs, further complicating governance. Christianity also taught pacifism (to not fight), which discouraged Romans from enlisting in the army and further encouraged Rome to rely on foreign fighters."

In what ways did Christianity lead to the downfall of the Roman empire? _____

Some dispute that Christianity contributed to the Fall of Rome. Why might they say this? _____
