In the response to Question 1:

Attitude could include:

- changing attitude from more negative in the past to more positive and accepting attitude toward women (and girls) playing football
- positive and/inclusive attitude towards all races and genders playing football
- positive attitude to women as having the power and skill to play football
- attitude of encouragement to, and acceptance of all young people of both genders and backgrounds being eligible to play football
- attitude of anticipation and enthusiasm for the variety of young people being exhorted to play the game
- attitude that embraces all to try football not just for the elite, but by participating, a young girl might become the 'elite', central female who is kicking the goal.

Accept other relevant answers.

The ways could include:

- choice of layout, framing, camera angle and shot (female figure central) convey the idea that women are powerful, competitive, skilled, enthusiastic and equal to male players
- body language and gaze (female looking and kicking directly at the viewer) show the woman's determination to play the game fully. Other players running forward in victory poses, suggest the central female has kicked a goal. (She is in the goal square)
- costume displays many team uniforms, suggesting playing football is now inclusive
- the young players on the field, both male and female and of varied ethnicity, suggest inclusivity, but also that the younger generation is coming forward to participate in football
- the oval, lined with gum trees, provides the Australian context: in particular, the image suggests a rural setting from where future players will originate
- sunlight radiates upward behind the central female player providing a heroic quality to her participation
- the written text invites youth and girls to 'play our game'. 'Our game' was owned by men, but now it is for both genders of varied ethnicity to play it. The setting reinforces the written text 'Australia's game'.

In the response to Question 2:

Perspective could include:

the perspective promoted by the poster:

- a feminist perspective: endorsement of women as competent footballers
- a perspective of female equality, power
- a perspective that recognises the need to encourage, persuade women and girls into a male-dominated game
- a perspective encouraging inclusivity and equality.

other perspectives on women playing football:

- a social engineering perspective: The creation of women's football designed to persuade society that women should be allowed, have equal access to, positions originally only for men.
- a compensatory perspective: Women's sport is not seen as equal and therefore it has to be promoted as something unique.

Students might discuss:

- how the poster has persuaded them to change their own perspective
- how they have taken a resistant reading of the poster and not changed their own perspective
- the effectiveness (or otherwise) of the poster adjusting the community's beliefs about women (youth and girls) playing football and how it has influenced their own perspective on the issue.

Accept other relevant answers.
