

The digestive system

Student: Class:

Every cell in your body needs certain nutrients from the food you eat so it can work properly. So, how do the large pieces of food that you eat get into the very small cells of your body? Food is broken down into tiny particles during a process called digestion. Digestion takes place in a number of organs that make up your digestive system.

Label each part of the body diagram and add a description of its role in digestion.

