Terminology associated with the instructional words in document studies and exams

Word/s	Usage: Asks students to
Account for	Give reasons for particular events or outcomes
Analyse	Make a detailed examination of the various components of an historical context; the people, events and/or ideas. 'Analyse' combined with 'to what extent' requires the student to make a judgement on these various components. 'Analyse' combined with 'critically' requires the student to make judgements about the merits or accuracy of these various components.
Assess	Make a judgement of the merits or significance of an argument, proposition or concept, ending with an evaluation of what has been argued or supported in the response.
Cause and effect	Used by historians to identify the chain of events and developments over time of long term or short term effects.
Concept	Refers to any notion or idea that is used to develop an understanding of the past
Compare	Show how things are similar and different.
Contemporary World	As defined in this syllabus the period of world history from 1945-2001
Contestability	Occurs when particular interpretations of the past are open to debate (for example, as a result of a lack of evidence or differing perspectives).
Continuity and Change	Aspects of the past that have remained the same over a period of time are referred to as continuous. Continuity and change are evident at any given period of time and concepts such as progress and decline may be used to evaluate continuity and change
Contrast	Show how things are different or opposite.
Consequence	Show the outcome of an event, action or policy. Consequence may be combined with 'short and/or long term'.
Debate/debate the proposition	Present arguments for both sides of a statement/proposition. Use historical details and evidence to support their arguments. Make a judgement as to which is the stronger argument.
Describe	Recount, write a detailed account of the particular people, event or ideas. Provide the narrative.
Discuss the author's perspective	Analyse a person's (or groups)/writer's viewpoints, attitudes and beliefs and how these influenced their representation of an historical person, event etc. In a document study this may include consideration of: Motives, bias, time, place, purpose
Discuss the proposition	Analyse the proposition then examine its validity. Can the proposition be supported by historical evidence?
Empathy	Empathy is the understanding the past from a particular point of view from an individual/ group, including an appreciation of the circumstances they faced, and the motivations, values and attitudes behind their actions.
Evaluate	Make an appraisal of the argument, proposition or concept citing both the advantages and limitations and concluding with a personal judgement.
Evidence	In the study of history, evidence is the information obtained from sources that is valuable for a particular inquiry.
Examine	Scrutinise carefully the known facts about a particular situation, person/s, event/s or idea/s and present findings in a balanced way.
Explain	Describe clearly and/or give reasons for: context, issue, idea, causes, consequences, action
Identify	Recognise the significance of one or more people, events and/or ideas contained in a document.
Interpretation	An explanation of the past, about a specific person, event or development. There may be more than one interpretation of a particular aspect of the past because historians use many sources.

- Identify: Determine the significance of one or more people, events and or ideas contained in a document (is it valid ?)
- Discuss: Analyse the writer's viewpoints, attitudes and beliefs
- Contestable: Give reason for how and why the documents are able to be debated (indicate the point of view, recount the limitations of the document and mention the issues/problems that result in its interpretation.

Description
Introduce the idea that there are contestable elements in Source 3
Identify the point of view of the document, suggesting why the perspective relates to the source
Identify the issues behind why the point of view is contestable (able to be debated). Consider bias, propaganda, political agenda, context and other events or ideas from the time period in question.
Repeat the above for Source 4
6 Marks

2e: Using your knowledge of the whole period of study, evaluate the importance of the themes, ideas and/or events represented in the four sources.

- Whole period of study: The time period from which your course begins, to its end date. For the USA it is inclusive of 1907-1941, for Nazi Germany this includes 1918- 1945.
- Evaluate: Make a judgement of the argument, proposition or concept suggested in the source.

Description
Identify the themes/ ideas/ events mentioned
Illustrate your knowledge of the period, by relating the theme/ideas/events mentioned in the documents to the context of the whole period of study.
Make a judgement about how important the themes/ideas/events mentioned in the documents are to the period of study as a whole. You might like to address long/ short-term effects of the themes.
Discuss what is not mentioned in the four sources that is important to the period of study, and should be acknowledged.
For example, for Germany, if the theme of the sources was leadership, you start with the context of leadership identified within the four sources, and then link the theme of leadership throughout your course of study, and then introduce other important themes, that you have studied in the course such as a, b, c.
7 Marks

End of Question 2: Document Set 2

Writing Skills: History Essay Construction

Introduction: this should be the map of your entire essay. It should present your position to the question, the definition of key ideas from the question, the ideas for discussion that will substantiate your position and reference to the period being discussed. A good introduction will inform your reader of the whole direction behind your work.

Steps:

1. Provide a response to the question via use of a thesis statement
2. Explain your position to the question by elaborating upon the thesis statement
3. Set the boundaries of the time period you are writing about
4. Define any key terms in the essay question- this will allow for your reader to be aware of exactly what you understand the task to mean
5. Provide the main points of discussion that will be covered in your essay – this tells the reader exactly what you will be examining in order to answer the question. It can also serve as a check-point for you, as once you have finished each body paragraph, you can check your next idea by what you have listed in the introduction.

Body Paragraphs: This should always start with a topic sentence outlining what information will be in the paragraph. It should be consistent with the argument outlined in your introduction and include evidence as substantiation to your discussion points. The number of body paragraphs is not simply three. These will vary depending upon the level of analysis and depth of your answer. It will also depend on how much you can write within a specified time.

Steps:

1. Construct a thesis statement that introduces your main idea for the current paragraph
2. Elaborate upon your thesis, explaining the relevance of the idea to the topic of the essay
3. Provide an example that helps to substantiate/ prove your idea/ position
4. Present a concluding sentence that will end your discussion of the current point, but that will also introduce the new paragraph to follow.

Conclusion: This is the last part of the essay, and as such it must provide a clear indication of what you know about the question, and it should reiterate the core components of your argument.

Steps:

1. Do not include new information
2. Do not summarise with “As you can see I have, in conclusion I have discussed”, this is too simplistic a form of language for your level
3. Do not present your ‘closing ideas’ in the conclusion- all arguments and major discussion points should have been discussed from the outset- therefore it is not appropriate to state that your “findings are....”, instead, present a final statement of why your position is as affirmed now, as it was in the introduction.

General points to remember:

- Follow instructional terms carefully, these will direct you to the nature of the task at hand
- Keep language formal, and suited to the tone of the task- avoid emotional language in your work
- Reserve personal judgement/ opinions for class discussions; if it can't be substantiated by a Historian/ expert, then leave the commentary out of your final piece
- Always read widely to ensure as that as much depth as possible is transferred into your answers
- Referencing is a must! Failure to acknowledge the work of a scholar, or work that is not your own will end in a zero grade. This is called plagiarism and it is forbidden in this subject
- Analysis is essential for strong results; this means extending your ideas beyond the re-telling of the historical narrative, and provided an insightful argument instead.
- A quote, if used correctly, will help to strengthen your response

History essays, for our purpose, are 45 minutes in length. You must then factor in how long a conclusion and body paragraphs will take you to write. As a guide, a strong introduction that addresses the question and outlines your argument could take around 7 minutes, a fair conclusion that summarises the topic could take 3 minutes. This would then allow 35 minutes for the construction of your body paragraphs.
