

Did everyone enjoy the social changes of the 1920s?

Supported and enjoyed the changes

FLAPPERS

Flappers were fond of the new fashions and the new freedom in their lives. Now they could smoke in public, ride motorbikes and wear the new fashions.

YOUNG PEOPLE

Most young people enjoyed all aspects of the new society. They went to the cinema, changed their attitudes, listened and danced to jazz music and went to the speakeasies.

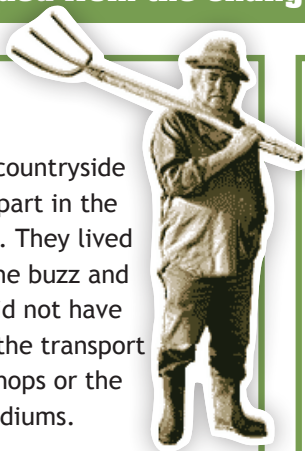

Change is good!

Were excluded from the changes

COUNTRY PEOPLE

People in the countryside couldn't take part in the social changes. They lived too far from the buzz and usually they did not have the money or the transport to reach the shops or the new sports stadiums.

POOR PEOPLE

Poor people couldn't enjoy the changes. They couldn't afford to pay for tickets to the sports games, or to travel to attend them, neither could they afford to buy the new fashionable clothes.

Opposed the changes

RELIGIOUS PEOPLE

Many religious people hated the changes. They saw jazz as the music of the devil, and hated the new dances. They also hated the effect of the changes on young people and on women.

WILLIAM H HAYS

The Hays Code was drawn up in 1930 to stop immorality in movies. It banned scenes of naked people and sexy dancing, stated that a kiss could last for no more than seven metres of film and that clergymen should never be portrayed as fools.

OLDER PEOPLE

Older people didn't like the new influences on their children. They were especially worried about their daughters and the influence the cinema had on their fashions and attitudes.

NO to change!
