

Progressive President from 1912-1921, Woodrow Wilson had always believed that the U.S. should leave its isolationist state and expand its economy and lifestyle around the globe. After the end of World War One when the "Treaty of Versailles" had commenced, Wilson's ~~thought~~ opportunity to state his ideas had become present. With ~~this~~ the ~~his~~ invention of the "fourteen point" policy, greatly promoting world peace and fair foreign trade amongst every nation, and the idea of banding together an organisation that epitomises

World peace, known as The League of Nations, ~~it was as if~~ ~~Wilson~~ Wilson's support for these movements were immense. When later returning to America and expressing these policies and movements to the people, ~~the~~ American Society immediately neglected this and ironically enough, U.S.A had retracted from the League of Nations, arguably being a contributor to the event of World War Two.

Although Wilson's action were deemed prepositional by society, ~~this~~ America's comfortability with isolationism was a key factor to their economic growth and overall rise in economy and lifestyle, considering them a major economic power.

America's economy thrived post-WWI for many reasons, causing them to be a 'global economic power.' The British and German industries were halted for many reasons like loss of workers and poor economy, which allowed America to ^{benefit.} ~~thrive~~. Selling munitions and food to Allies, the American income rose and increased the economy which eventually led to an economic boom. The most significant part about America's economic boom was that they became a global economic power, meaning their economy was the best in the world. For America, the economic impact of WWI was very positive and significant because the economy was the best in the world.

When ~~there~~ World War One (WWI) broke out in 1914, president Woodrow Wilson declared America neutral. Although America remained neutral for the most part of the war, it still had a significant impact on Americas social, political and economical factors. Politically Americas neutrality started strong with many ~~isolationist~~ isolationist ideas to keep them neutral. Americas economy boosted largely with trade with allies. Womens rights were significantly changed with the 19th amendment and caused massive social change.

In a social retrospect, WWI influenced society colossaly. One principal factor it provoked was civil liberties being ^{oppressed} ~~diminished~~. The civil freedoms that were evidently deconstructed was were evidently deconstructed as a repercussion of the Espionage act of 1917, which attested that anyone that was suspected of subversive behavior could be investigated and the sedition act, that was enacted in 1918, which articulated that expression of opinion that defamed the war was prohibited. Another fundamental consequence of WWI was conscription, as a result of the detrimental damage ^{the war} bestowed. If ~~that~~ WWI did not transpire society would unambiguously be disparate.

Although America was declared neutral in 1914 when war broke out in Europe, World War One greatly affected America. The war helped the economy to boom and production to increase by necessity to supply resources to the allies in battle. It led America into the prosperous period known as the 'Roaring Twenties' and morphed America into the Global powerhouse it is known as today.

Politically, Woodrow Wilson tried to implicate his fourteen point plan to prevent further wars occurring. Economically, America's productivity increased rapidly because of American soil not being touched by the War. Women entered the workforce during World War One, which led to them gaining the right to vote in the 19th Amendment in 1920. The Great War had a significant effect on America, allowing it to become the economic powerhouse it is and changing the way of life for American citizens, especially the women.
